D. Text Production

1. Headteacher for a day

If I were the headteacher for a day, I'd declare a „No Homework Day“, organize a talent show, hold an art workshop, and arrange a special lunch. It would be a fun-filled day, where we could showcase all our diverse talents, express our creativity, enjoy delicious food, and have a blast. There would be only one rule, everyone would have to participate in activities and interact with their classmates. Playing a mobile game alone somewhere would not be allowed. Students and teachers would realize that learning can be done differently and that a school of the future must offer a different programme.

The two best football players of our school competed against each other in the final match of the school cup. Samuel and Harry are actually best friends but today on the pitch they regarded one another as opponents. They both pushed their teams and the longer the match lasted, the more they forgot about their friendship. In the last minutes of the match, Harry got past Samuel, but Samuel wouldn't let him succeed and stepped on his foot. Both had to leave the pitch, Harry with an injury and Samuel because of a red card. In the end, Harry's team won in a penalty shootout.

Meghan and Mason were nominated by their teachers to participate in the Big Challenge, a language competition in which students from across the country can prove their English skills. They had put a lot of effort into the task and when they were finally able to view the results online, they could hardly believe their eyes. They were both in the top five of the country. They will now travel to England in the summer because that was one of the prizes to be won.
